Common questions

Q: HOW DOES INTERIOR PHOTOGRAPHY DIFFER FROM REAL ESTATE OR ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY?

A: The goal of real estate photography is to sell the property, so providing potential buyers with a virtual tour (think: wide room shots) is the focus of a seasoned professional. Architectural photographers aim for well-composed, correct-perspective images captured both inside and out, as showcasing the project as a whole is of the utmost importance to their clients.

While my style is closer to that of an architectural photographer, I work with tighter compositions that allow me to highlight the specific design elements of a space. I also primarily shoot with natural light, which offers a more editorial feel.

Q: DO YOU ONLY SHOOT WITH NATURAL LIGHT?

A: When it comes to capturing interiors, natural light is queen! (To learn why.. click here!) 98% of my Interior Sessions are shot exclusively with natural light, but there is always an exception or two!

Q: HOW WILL MY FINAL
IMAGES BE EDITED?

A: Your final gallery will be edited in my clean, bright, true-to-colour style. Retouching, from fine colour adjustments to detailed edits, is included with your booking. Please note, completing unfinished work, adding appliances, or otherwise altering the space digitally is not included.

Q: DO YOU STYLE OR STAGE
THE SPACE BEFORE
PHOTOGRAPHING IT?

A: Hiring an experienced stylist to stage your space (ie. make it look like a photo spread straight out of House & Home!) is going to elevate our Interior Session tenfold.

While I might move a prop to strengthen the composition of a particular shot, I'm not a stylist by any means. It's taken me years to hone my craft, and it's the same in other creative industries.

If a stager just isn't in your budget, plan ahead and think minimal. Every item in your space should compliment the design as a whole, if it doesn't, KonMari it out of there!
